A resource by and for young people

Trauma from war and conflict: what’s difficult and what helps?

What’s difficult?

It can be really difficult for young people to leave their home because it wasn’t safe to stay. They may have had to leave family and friends. They may have had a number of traumatic events and sometimes these can still affect them even after the danger has passed. Although these challenges are normal and understandable sometimes they can still be difficult to cope with.

Do you recognise any of these?

“My body hurts, I often get headaches or stomach aches even though I don’t have a physical illness.”

“In my mind the past is happening again right now.”

“Sometimes I can’t think for hours.”

“Distressing memories come into my mind during the day or night.”

“I feel guilty about what happened.”

“I feel so sad and alone.”

“It’s difficult to sleep, I often have bad dreams.”

“I am anxious and have lots of worries about things.”

“Trusting people is difficult.”

“Is there something else you find difficult? Write it in here.”

“I don’t want to talk about or think about the difficult things that happened in my past.”

“I get angry or upset more easily.”

“Even though I know I’m probably safe, I keep watching out for something bad to happen.”

“I can’t concentrate easily.”

“Thinking about the future is difficult. I try to cope each day.”

“I am jumpy and nervous all the time.”

“Even though I know I’m probably safe, I keep watching out for something bad to happen.”

Having some of these difficulties is normal, in fact young people all over the world experience the same kind of reactions after traumatic events. But just because it’s normal, it doesn’t mean it’s easy or that it has to be like this forever.
What helps?

In the present  There are some things that can be helpful in the short term if your feelings are difficult to manage. Different people find different things useful. Try some of these things out and see which work for you:

- In touch
  Find things that feel nice to touch or hold. Maybe things that feel soothing and help bring you back to the here and now.
  For example: playdough, lime, soft fabric, feathers, a squeeze ball, a smooth pebble.

- Feelings Journal
  Use a notepad to keep a journal of your thoughts and feelings.
  Can you describe the feeling? If it had a colour, what colour would it be?
  Where do you feel it? If it were a type of weather, what would it be?
  You could write in your first language, in English or you might fill it with drawings.
  Choose what to share and what to keep private.

- Music for my mind
  Listen to a piece of music that feels calming or reminds you of a good memory.
  You could make a playlist of the best tracks to help your emotions settle.

- Tense and relax
  Tense and relax different muscles in your body. Maybe start with your feet and move upwards.
  Hold the muscles tight in one part of your body for ten seconds and then breathe out slowly as you relax them.

- Nature
  Get outside to feel the sun, wind or rain.
  Feel the air on your face or hands.

- 5 4 3 2 1
  Try finding:
  5 things you can see
  4 things you can touch
  3 things you can hear
  2 things you can smell
  1 thing you can taste

- Mountains and valleys breathing
  Calmly and slowly trace up and down each finger on your hand.
  Breathe in as you trace up each finger.
  Breathe out as you trace down each finger.

- Reset meditation
  Sit down and be quiet and still.
  This might be at a time of prayer or following a short meditation, maybe using an app.

- Cool it
  Drink a cup of cool water slowly through a straw.

- Move it
  Do something physical that you enjoy.
  For example: running, swimming, dancing, football, cricket

In the longer term  Finding ways to manage your memories can really help. Try talking to someone you trust. You might prefer to write or draw about your memories – anything that helps you get them outside of your head. If your thoughts and feelings are making everyday life difficult, you might want some extra support. You could speak to a trained therapist.

It’s not always easy to ask for help, or to find the right help, but it can really make a difference.

Finding support

If you are struggling and looking for more help, you could contact: Your school or college, your doctor, a local community group, or other professionals who support you: a social worker, key worker, foster carer...
